Our Merchandise Agrees With What We Say About It.

We've Scheduled the Round-Up for Another Week

It will be your gain. You know the force of the reductions all last week-well, the same good news we told you from day to day we iterate again. Repetition makes old music all the sweeter; the telling of Round-Up reductions never loses its interest---for the subject touches the home, the purse strings. Remember, every department is included in the sweeping concessions.

Another original bucking broncho. It's lots of fun up thereif one stays there!

THE ACTION OF A RUNNING HORSE.

Everyone is familiar with old pictures of running horses: the graceful stride—one foreleg reaching out, the other bent beneath the body, one hind leg reaching back, the other nearly touching the ground; the tail flowing behind.

Artists of long ago established this graceful movement on canvas and in wood cut engravings. With the introduction of instantaneous photography it was revealed that the accepted, graceful stride was only one of a thousand stages of motion. Nearly every photograph showed ungraceful action-one leg stiffly resting on the ground, the other three in ungainly attitude in the air. Sometimes all four legs were doubled under the running horse, while another view showed a front and hind leg straight out, the third doubled under the body and the fourth awkwardly supporting the weight of the animal.

Instantaneous pictures upset the old theory and showed that action in running appeared awkward and laborious.
